Lead Actors: Sheehan O'Heron, Simon Sorrells

Synopsis of the Film; A novice filmmaker returns to his small, rural hometown to make a documentary about flowers and their significance at the major stages of human life: birth, death, marriage, etc. Hopelessly obsessed with capturing truth and reality, the filmmaker is none too pleased when a sudden, inexplicable ZOMBIE uprising turns 'reality' on its head.

Interesting Facts:

Cache Location, Locus Grove Cemetary, founded in 1790. A group of English Roman Catholics from Maryland settled in this area after the Revolution and established the first Roman Catholic Church in the State. A log church was built at this site and a large plot of ground consecrated for burial purposes.

The movie Pushing up Daises is an official selection of the 2010 Atlanta Film Festival. The movie was filmed in Crawfordville, GA. Pushin' Up Daisies is a comedy about Darren (Sheehan O'Heron), a well-meaning filmmaker who returns to his small hometown one summer to shoot a documentary his plan is to follow around his older brother Rusty (Simon Sorrells), who delivers flowers for a living. Even though Rusty is a bit camera-shy and finding a film crew in Tokyo, Georgia is no easy task, these prove to be the least of Darren's problems when zombies begin taking over the world. But little does he worry about the usual dangers of zombie invasion; his primary concern is artistic integrity. Darren vows to finish his documentary as he envisioned it by shooting around the zombies and pretending that nothing out of the ordinary is actually happening. In other words, capturing reality becomes more a matter of creating it. The story is expertly constructed, the performances are all quite good Ken Osbourn, a real-life blind voice-over actor playing the role of a blind voice-over actor, steals every scene he's in, and the zombies - when they show up - look absolutely fantastic. The cast includes the following Taliaferro County residents Robert and Myrtle Kendrick, John and Katherine Allen, Louise Greene, Charlie Taylor, Lynn Bradford, Dillard and Shirley Noggle, Kathleen Stewart.
